WE met an acquaintance on the street yesterday, and he was in a peculiar situation, naturally enquired how he was getting along.
"Why, I'm doing a smashing business—I'm getting rich!"
"Well, I'm glad to hear that," said I, "but I wonder what the process is that has made you so rich. I employ all to come to me, and give them their good wages. I furnish my hands subsistence, and agree in good faith to give them so much money per month, payable at the end of that month. They work faithfully, and at the end of the month I find them in good luck, and interestingly, during which time their previously empty stomachs have been filled, and their faces then no more weary, but they depart quietly between two nails, and never even say 'good-bye,' or call upon me for any amount of their money. I find them, after three months, have employed me a hundred and fifty hands, and they have cost me the sum, all told, of $37,500! So you see I'm necessarily compelled to get rich. It is no fault of mine. I stand ready to fulfill my contracts; and withal, I have witnesses to substantiate my claims. I find them in good luck, and interest-

contracts; and withal, I have witnesses to substantiate
my claims. I find them in good luck, and interestingly, during which time their previously empty
